

Conference Chase

Here is an idea for a conference game I made a few years ago. I call it Conference Chase. My family loves this game--even my husband and I look forward to playing it. It keeps us all focused on listening to the sessions (well, my little ones are mostly focused :). Enjoy!

How to make Conference Chase: You will need poster board, scissors, a glue stick and a small template to trace around. My pictures came from old issues of the Ensign and Friend magazines as well as old Distribution Services catalogs.

Using a template, cut out various gospel themed pictures to make game spaces (I think I cut about 70 pictures)--be sure to cut pictures the same size. You will also need a larger picture for the "Win Space". Start with a regular size piece of poster board. Use the small pictures to make several paths to the larger picture. Glue all pictures down. Make word strips for pictures if desired (see game board: you will notice that I have placed word strips on some of the pictures on my game board --I wanted my family to listen for that specific word.) I suggest you laminate the game board for durability.

How to play Conference Chase: You will need a game piece for each player (we use counting bears). Adults or older children might want to team up with younger children. Line the game pieces up on the left side of the board and as you listen to conference listen for the words represented by each picture. When you hear that word, advance your piece to that game space--one space at a time. You may not skip over spaces! You can move vertically, horizontally or diagonally. The winner is the person who reaches the largest picture, or "Win Space" at the right side of the board first.

Last Updated (Sunday, 28 September 2008)